Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County: http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/www_bc_cal.php

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Stubborn onshore flow will allow some low clouds to persist along the immediate northwest California coast each night and morning into next week. Farther inland, seasonable temperatures are expected today but highs will gradually increase to well above normal by the end of the week. Thunderstorm chances will increase over the weekend.

Medford Weather:

A weak upper level disturbance is bringing increased cloud cover to extreme northern California. There is some precipitation with these clouds, but the atmosphere below them is too dry for any of the precipitation to make very far down, and none is expected to reach the surface let alone measure.

Reno Weather:

A low pressure system will move into the West Coast today and produce gusty winds and potentially dangerous fire conditions. After a brief cool down early this week, hot and dry weather will continue for most of the week as high pressure develops over the west.

San Francisco Weather:

Cooler conditions are expected today and Monday as onshore flow increases. High pressure will then build over California from Tuesday through the end of the week resulting in a warming trend, but mainly across inland areas. Dry weather is forecast to continue through the week.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Conditions are expected to be cooler today and Monday with daytime highs slightly below normal. Warming trend begins midweek bringing another round of hot weather Thursday into the weekend.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure will continue to bring dry conditions and above normal temperatures today. A subtle cooling trend will take place over central California during the first half of the week before temperatures warm again beginning Wednesday.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

High pressure aloft will continue to bring hot temperatures to inland areas through today with triple digit highs possible for the Antelope Valley and foothills. The upper high will move east with weak low pressure and gradual cooling expected through the middle of next week. Gradual warming is expected late this week and Saturday as upper level high pressure starts to move in again. Marine layer clouds will affect the coastal areas during the night and morning hours.

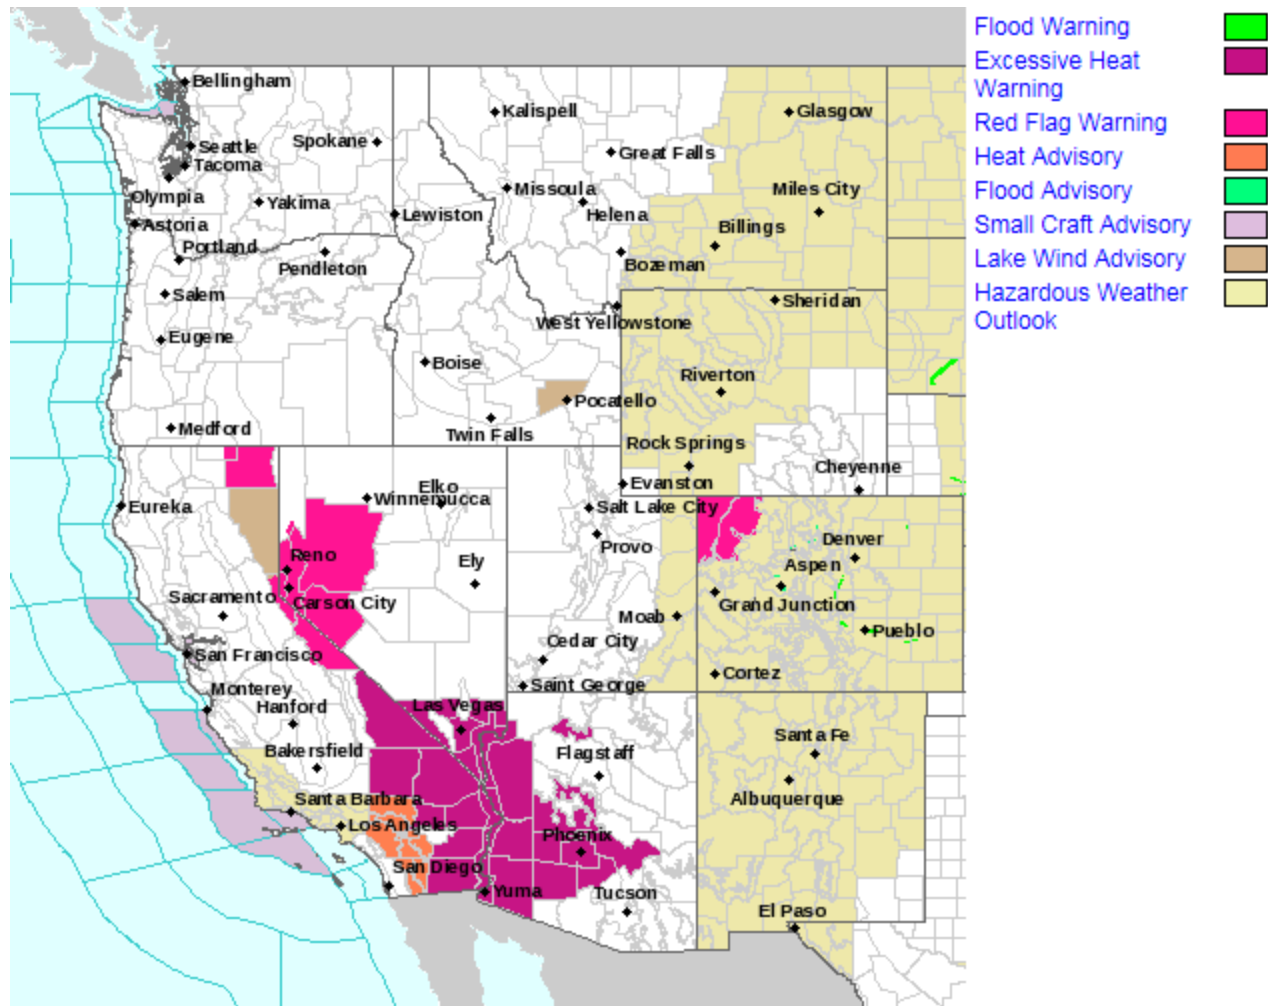

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Hot weather for inland areas will continue, although not quite as hot as the last several days. High pressure aloft will weaken slightly and the marine layer will extend cooler coastal air a little farther inland this coming week.

Southeast California Weather:

The heat wave will continue into the coming week, but some minor relief will occur as some increasing moisture will help to keep temperatures a bit lower than last week. More significant increases in moisture, along with lower temperatures, are expected later next week beginning Thursday.

Unmanned Aircraft Systems in Disaster Management

Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) are an emerging technology on the verge of revolutionizing disaster management. This course aims to explain the uses of UAS in disaster work, from mitigation and preparedness to response and recovery, while detailing the different types of UAS and how they are appropriate for different uses. The course also explains the current Federal Aviation Administration UAS regulations, how to apply for authorization to use UAS, and how to ensure the involvement of the local community and protection of privacy.
